

Did you graduate from Holmes High School?

Holmes High School is the oldest public high school in Kentucky. It began in 1853 as Covington Central, then became Covington High and eventually came to be called Holmes in the second decade of the 20th Century. To honor and celebrate the 150-year history and the promise of this institution, an alumni advisory committee has been planning some events. The committee earnestly hopes you will participate.

This spring there will be an alumni choral concert, an alumni band concert, and a gala at the Northern Kentucky Convention Center during which a video of interviews with alumni will make its premiere screening.
